Rivers in Kaohsiung (高雄) City

When people talk about Kaohsiung (高雄), they often think of the ocean, mountains, and delicious food. But have you ever noticed the rivers flowing through the city? From mountain areas to busy downtown streets, rivers connect Kaohsiung's nature, history, food, and life. Today, let's take a river trip together!

Our first stop is the Nanzixian (楠梓仙) River in Qishan (旗山). Qishan (旗山) was once an important center for bananas and sugar. Near the river, you can learn about the old sugar industry and walk along Qishan (旗山) Old Street to try some sweet banana cakes. "Mmm... Do you smell that?" "Banana cake!" "Can I have one more, please?" The sweet smell, the old street, and the river show us Qishan's past and present.

Next, let's follow the Gaoping (高屏) River to Dashu (大樹). Here, the Old Railroad Bridge tells another story. "Listen! Can you hear a train?" Not now—but long ago, trains crossed the river, connecting Kaohsiung (高雄) and Pingtung (屏東). Today, the old bridge and wetland park are great places for walking, riding bikes, and watching birds. Besides its natural beauty, Dashu (大樹) is also famous for pineapples and lychees. "Look! Birds near the bridge!" "Wow! Nature and history come together here!"

At last, let's head to downtown Kaohsiung (高雄) and visit the Love River. In the past, it was used for transportation and trade. Today, people walk along the river, take boat rides, and enjoy the lights at night. But wait! What's that sound? "One! Two! One! Two!" It is the Dragon Boat Festival! The paddlers move together, and the boats race across the water. "One! Two! One! Two!" "Go! Go! Go!" People cheer, and the quiet river suddenly bursts with energy fills with energy!

From the Nanzixian (楠梓仙) River to the Gaoping (高屏) River and the Love River, every river has a different story. Some stay close to farms. Others carry memories of trains and industry. Still others bring people together for festivals and fun.

So, next time you visit Kaohsiung (高雄), don't just look at the mountains or the ocean. Listen carefully. The rivers are flowing, and they are telling the stories of Kaohsiung (高雄).
